Information security issues continue to be a high priority for financial institutions and their regulators. As technology continues to advance at a rapid pace the risk of cybersecurity threats has continued to increase and security breaches have unfortunately become common and alarming as banks have shifted towards a more digital banking environment. The question is no longer “if” your institution will suffer a breach but “when.”

Data breaches can be extremely costly and expose a financial institution to regulatory criticism, civil liability, and reputational risk. Bank regulators have long understood the inevitability of security breaches. While preventive efforts remain crucial, the real focus of examiners seems to be on the response. However, when a breach does occur, financial institutions must navigate a maze of federal and state breach notification laws to determine their response obligations.

For this reason, this Webinar will delve into the laws and regulations concerning information security breaches, including the specific requirements for financial institutions in responding to a breach. Please join us for an in-depth discussion of cybersecurity incident and response obligations for financial institutions.

Highlighted areas will include:

- What is a “breach” of the system?
- What laws and regulations apply to information security breaches?
- What should my response program address?
- What happens when my vendor or service provider suffers a breach?
- When must I notify my customers or individuals of a breach?
- When must I notify a regulator of a breach?
- Are business customers protected by the laws on information security or only consumers?
- Recent changes to notification deadlines under California's breach notification law
