

BCG Monthly Telephone Briefing

March 2017

Federal and State Laws on Telemarketing and Spam

Do you know what your marketing or loan collections departments are doing on the phone or computer? Email and text spam can be worse than irritating to your customers – it can also expose your institution to massive civil liability. Individual cell phones are protected against unsolicited marketing calls, which can include voice calls as well as texts. Just because a call or text recipient is an existing customer does not fully protect you from liability for illegal use of the recipient's data ("minutes") on their phone. Land lines (remember those?) are protected too from unsolicited marketing calls. Most legitimate calls to service an existing account are permissible but where do you draw the line between permissible and impermissible calls, texts and emails? Should we just all go back to mailing out paper?

This month's handout and telephone briefing will try to sort out the blizzard of different laws that regulate email spam (CAN-SPAM), voice calls (FTC and FCC regulations on telemarketing) and, to the extent possible, texting. Examples tailored to financial institutions will be part of the discussion.
